The Phenomenology Of Man And

The Phenomenon of Man is an essay by the French geologist, paleontologist, philosopher, and Jesuit priest Pierre Teilhard de Chardin. In this work, Teilhard describes evolution as a process that leads to increasing complexity, culminating in the unification of consciousness. The text was written in the 1930s, but it achieved publication only posthumously, in 1955. In depth, the work seeks to unify multiple scientific fields, as per the author's multidisciplinary approach in his own career, with Existential phenomenology: it is the expanded formulation of Heidegger, as it is exposed in his "Being and Time" of 1927, that says that the observer cannot separate from the world and, therefore, it is a combination of the phenomenological method with the importance of understanding man in his existential world.

Phenomenology is a broad discipline and method of inquiry in philosophy, developed largely by the German philosophers Edmund Husserl and Martin Heidegger, which is based on the premise that reality consists of objects and events ("phenomena") as they are perceived or understood in the human consciousness, and not of anything independent of human consciousness.

In the phenomenological tradition of Edmund Husserl and Martin Heidegger we find a vivid picture of man as a being meditatively alone but fundamentally social. It is often thought that philosophers favor living alone, in isolation, devoting themselves to quiet contemplation. There is the standard image of the guru or sadhu living in a cave.
